

CPP-D Benefits Checklist

Series funded by the Notary Foundation of BC, the Law Foundation of British Columbia and Legal Services Society

These are some of the programs and benefits you may be eligible for if you receive Canada Pension Plan Disability Benefits (CPP-D). These programs are of particular relevance for BC residents.

Income/Disability Assistance

If the monthly amount of your CPP disability benefits is relatively low and you have little in savings, you may be eligible for provincial income assistance or disability assistance. For example, if you are a single person and your total annual income is below $9,600 and your savings are around $5,000, you should look into applying for British Columbia's Persons with Disabilities (PWD) benefit. People who qualify for PWD will be topped up to a minimal monthly income level ($906 in the case of a single person) and are eligible for medical coverage and health and transportation supplements.

To find out if you qualify for provincial income or disability assistance, contact the Ministry of Social Development and Social Innovation at 1-866-866-0800 or www.eia.gov.bc.ca/bcea.htm.

The Disability Tax Credit and Income Tax programs

Canada Pension Plan benefits are taxable income. However, you do not have to pay income tax if your annual taxable income is below the personal exemption amounts set by the Canada Revenue Agency (CRA). If you are in a taxable bracket, you can apply for the Disability Tax Credit which may allow you to reduce the amount of income tax you pay and may qualify you for other programs, such as the Registered Disability Savings Plan.

To apply for the Disability Tax Credit, contact CRA and ask for the application form called the Disability Tax Credit Certificate (T2201).

You can also ask for the booklet noted in the next paragraph. Phone: 1-800-959-2221 www.cra-arc.gc.ca/E/pbg/tf/t2201/t2201-12e.pdf

A CRA booklet called Medical and Disability-Related Information is available online or in print. The booklet describes health and disability information within the context of income tax programs and includes the Disability Tax Credit Certificate (T2201): www.cra-arc.gc.ca/E/pub/tg/rc4064/rc4064-e.html

Other programs you may find helpful

Registered Disability Savings Plan (RDSP)

This is an initiative that is available to people with disabilities and their families. There are 4 steps you must follow to be eligible for the RDSP.

- Make sure you are eligible and apply for the Disability Tax Credit.
- Have a valid Social Insurance Number.
- Be up-to-date in filing your tax returns.
- Be under the age of 60.

For more information on RDSPs, see our Help Sheet 14: The Registered Disability Savings Plan and the Disability Tax Credit.

You can find many free RDSP resources on our website at www.disabilityalliancebc.org/rdsp.htm.

BC Hydro Energy Savings Kits

BC Hydro provides free energy saving kits for low income people and families. The kit includes items such as low-flow shower heads, weather stripping and compact fluorescent light bulbs. To qualify, you must have a BC Hydro account in your name. Call BC Hydro at 1-877-431-9463 or contact the DABC office.
